

I know that they have backed-off a little, but that doesn't change what is trying to be done. Allowing time for others to respond is not sufficient in this case. It is a blatant political misuse of the airwaves to do this in the manner originally noted. And I for one think we've had too much of this.

Sinclair Broadcasting's decision to force their stations to air an anti-Kerry documentary days before the election is a clear example of the dangers of media consolidation.

Sinclair uses the public airwaves free of charge, and is obligated by law to serve the public interest. But when large companies control the airwaves, we get more of what's good for the bottom line and less of what we need for our democracy. Instead of something produced at "News Central" far away, it's more important that we see real people from our own communities and more substantive news about issues that matter.

Sinclair's actions show why we need to strengthen media ownership rules, not weaken them. They show why the license renewal process needs to involve more than a returned postcard.

Concentrated media power only leads ultimately to abuse of this type.

Thank you for your consideration.
